DESCRIPTION OF SERVICES

Program to improve the efficiency and management of field crops, dairy, fruit, livestock, vegetables and poultry production. The most current research, cultural techniques, agronomic facts, and marketing skills are taught through educational meetings, field demonstrations, newsletters and seminars. Homeowners and the agriculture-business community can obtain a wide variety of information and educational literature to help them solve their day-to-day agricultural problems. Agricultural agents work with commodity groups, government agencies and agricultural business to conserve and manage natural resources, promote agriculture and maintain a healthy environment for county residents. The Rutgers Environmental Steward program is offered on an annual basis to teach the science behind current environmental issues and encourage more effective volunteerism on environmental issues. Provides information and education services to all people without regard to sex, race, national origin, handicap, disability, color or age.
